

The old town of Jinsafut

The village of Jinsafut is located to the east of Qalqilya, about 16 km away from it, and about 430 meters above sea level, and its land area is about 9356 dunums. Edward Robinson mentioned in 1838 AD that it is one of the villages of Bani Saab, and also mentioned by Victor Guérin the French in 1870 AD as one of the villages of Bani Saab without visiting it, as he described it while he was in Far'ata. In surveys in western Palestine in 1882 AD, it was also mentioned as a small village on a hill containing water wells on its northern side, and olive fields. In 1997, Riwaq documented the old town of Jinsafut, where it counted about 63 historical buildings; most of these buildings are connected (38 buildings), 21 single buildings, 37 buildings used to the present time, and three partially used, and 23 abandoned buildings. The village had about 45 single-story buildings, 13 two-story buildings, and one three-story building. As for the materials used in construction, are limestone and lime mortar, and mud was also used. The ceilings and roofs were built with the cross-contract system for 41 buildings, with a single dome. The flat roofs were also used in 21 buildings, where iron dowels were used in 18 buildings.
